

HOMEPORT

A proud city for a proud ship — that's Boston, Massachusetts. It was with a deep feeling of attachment that BOSTON entered the Boston Harbor and headed for her berth at Pier Seven for the first time in late September 1958, a Med Cruise just completed. Each subsequent time, it has seemed more and more like home.

Boston, the Hub of New England, is indeed a great city. Its people, steeped in Yankee traditionalism, have a real pride in their city's fighting namesake. It is a city whose history parallels that of USS BOSTON, the first of whose ancestors joined the American Navy in 1776.

Because of its many recreational facilities, its cultural and educational activities and its ideal location, Boston is considered an ideal liberty town. With big league baseball, two symphony orchestras, many churches, innumerable clubs, restaurants and theatres, a flourishing, raucous night life along Washington Street, and a wealth of young ladies working and attending schools in the area, no wonder it is so highly thought of by BOSTON's crew.

BOSTON is very proud of her home port and we hope she can always call it so.
