in Sicily. The highlights of our two-day visit here seemed to be the Italian portrait painters and the tours to Syracuse and Messina. These tours afforded a chance to explore the ruins of once-beautiful Greek architecture that flourished around 600 B. C. in this part of the world. Notable features were the ancient Catacombs, Cathedrals and large natural caves.

Our next stop was Naples, Italy, the first big port of the cruise. Some of us went on sponsored tours to the ancient city of Pompeii, a few journeyed to Rome and the Vatican, while others observed the daily life of Naples itself.

The Pompeii tourists strolled through the ruins of the city destroyed by Mt. Vesuvius in 79 A. D.—allegedly as a punishment for its wickedness
